To the Undergraduate Admissions Committee,

I am happy to write this letter for Dibias Boro, who has been a student at our school for several years now. I have watched him grow from a quiet, hardworking boy into a young man who carries real responsibility well, and I write this recommendation with genuine confidence in him.

Dibias is polite and easy to work with. He is respectful to teachers, staff, and his classmates, and he listens when he is corrected instead of getting defensive about it, which is not always common at this age. He does his work sincerely and does not need to be reminded twice. He is not the type of student who pushes himself forward for attention. More often he is the one quietly helping in the background, making sure things run smoothly, and stepping in when someone is needed.

He has been an active part of school life. As House Captain of Lachit House, he took his role seriously and pushed his teammates to participate, and under him Lachit House won first position in our annual house competition that year. He has also helped teachers organize school programmes over the years, including our annual function, farewell events, and cultural programmes, and he has anchored a few of these events too, handling himself calmly in front of the whole school.

Academically, he has grown steadily. His marks improved each year from Class 9 through Class 11, which tells me he was putting in real effort rather than coasting. In Class 11 he scored 85% and stood second in his class, just behind the topper who scored 87%. Our teachers expect him to score around 87% in Class 12, and with continued effort we think 90% is within his reach. He also secured All India Rank 2429 in the Aryabhatta National Mathematics Competition, which says something about his ability in maths, though I would say his real strength is simply his attitude — he does not get discouraged easily and keeps working at things he finds difficult.

I should mention that Dibias is among the first students from our school to apply to universities abroad, and he has had to figure out much of the application process on his own since we have little experience guiding students through it. He has managed this alongside his regular schoolwork without letting either slip.

Outside school, he is involved in some volunteering and small leadership activities in his village. I do not know all the details of this work, but from what I have seen of him here, I have no reason to doubt that he brings the same sincerity to it.

Dibias comes from a middle-class family and qualifies for the Common Application fee waiver. He has never let this be an excuse and has made use of whatever opportunities came his way.

I would not call Dibias an extraordinary student in the way that word is sometimes used. He is a steady, sincere, dependable young man who works hard and treats people well, and I think that matters more in the long run. I recommend him to your university without hesitation and believe he will settle in well and contribute honestly to whatever community he becomes part of.

Sincerely,
Joji Joseph
